Subject: PROSTITUTION ENQUIRY

My concern is that legalizing prostitution while advantageous to the male clientele has not sufficiently protected the women in the 'industry'.

The correct ACT legislation may be a step in the right direction, but surely we need to progress to the next stage, where women can truly have a choice not only to enter the industry but to exit it at will without intimidation; and for those women who remain to be free of oppression and have access to social (and even religious) counselling should they so choose, again without intimidation.

Much more effort must be made in finding a more equitable and fair system that will protect the rights of women many of whom are at great disadvantage. I fear great injustice is being done 'below the radar'.
