Canberra is the capital of Australia and doesn't need ads for weapons, defence contractors, coal mines or foreign investment plastering the landscape.

We already gave the Convention Centre in Civic huge concessions with their giant illuminated and animated billboard. If anything needs to be changed, it is to tear that abomination down. Don't try defining a billboard as something it's not just so you can put a few hundred up in public spaces to make money for advertising agencies. They do not enhance public land, they bring no utility to residents, they only serve to distract from our natural skylines and awesome sunsets.

We have managed to survive without billboards for a hundred years, let's not ruin the landscape now.
