Subject: Inquiry into the operation of the Prostitution Act 1992

Hello

I have been reading about the prostitution inquiry. I was appalled to find how lax we are with prostitution laws in this country. Nothing bad ever gets better by legalising it and yet time after time when hard issues come up regarding things we rather see our population do less of we say "lets legalise it, that way we can regulate it" or "if we legalise it people wont be so desperate to do it." A brief look at world history shows these views to be obviously wrong, so why would it be any different with sex? If a guy is desperate enough for sex to pay for it, and if another guy has enough disregard for the self esteem of women that he is willing to use them to make money from the first guy, then what good can possibly come from letting these two guys get together? At the end of the day, the customer is further away from a real relationship with a woman he can share love with, the brothel owner has reinforced his opinion that a vagina is just a piece of equipment he can make money from, and the prostitute is all alone. Please completely ban this industry and the industries that feed it. It's the only way.
