

To Whom It May Concern:

Re: Billboards in the ACT.

I don't believe that many Canberra residents take Canberra's billboard-free status for granted. By deliberately not having billboards, Canberra continues to distinguish itself as a planned city that integrates with the natural landscape. I believe that this distinction is more than aesthetic, but speaks to Canberra's values around environmental and historical conservation and custodianship.

It is fitting that Canberra continues to be billboard free, as this dovetails with the ACT's strong leadership around renewables, emissions and waste reduction. Let the image of Canberra reflect Canberra's intentions. Let Canberra continue to be an example of a city that does things differently, that does things better, that does things with future generations in mind.
